This image is a historical map of the World, dated 1762. It depicts the known lands of the globe at that time, with continents labeled and connected by lines. The map is oriented with the North Pole at the top, and various regions are color-coded to distinguish different countries or territories. The map includes annotations and details that were typical of the period, offering insights into the understanding of geographical relationships and exploration during the 18th century.